I was told the opposite was true, the yellow 2mg bars worked better than the white bars, If you really want the brand name and have insurance, the physician can write on the script at your request brand name medically necessary, If your insurance does not pay for brand name your could be looking at $100.00 or more in the difference, But you do have a point my M.D. claims generics are 30% less effective than the brand name drugs. Something to think about.

It is a Federal mandate that ALL generic drugs must be passed by the FDA to be constituted EXACTLY as the name brand. (If you are buying your Xanax from Mexico, I'd be concerned!) This includes their potency. For those of you who feel the generics are not as effective, you have been misinformed or are just imagining a difference. Many drug companies now produce Xanax in the generic form which is called Alprazolam. When I switched pharmacies a while ago, the color AND shape of my Alprazolam was different. A simple consult with the pharmacist assured me it was exactly the same. And to notmenow who was told by your doctor that generics are 30% less effective than name brands, I think he needs to take a refresher course in pharmacology! He's not been keeping up to date with his reading in the JAMA! 30%! Sounds like he/she is firmly in the pockets of the drug reps and their perks if he/she insists on prescribing you only name brand meds. YOU pay more, THEY get more kickbacks. It is indeed SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT!Xanax Bars | Pharmed.org
